WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 8.

"O RARE BEN JONSON."

Of the ancestry of Ben Jonson very iittle is known. His grandfather, whose Christian name is not mentioned, is said to have removed to England from Scotland in the raign of Heary the Eighth, in whose service he entered, in what capacity it is not stated. He is said to have possessed an estate, which descended to his son, whose Christian name also . is not mentioned and who was thrown into prison, when Mary ascended the throne, the estate, of course, being torfeited. He was finally released, and embraced the Church. So Ben, as he told Drummond, was a minister's son. His father never saw him, for he died a month before his birth. He was born in Westminister: but Fuller says with all his industry he could not find him in his cradle, though he could fetch him from his long clothes. When a little child he lived in Hartshorne Lane, near Charing Cross, where his mother married a bricklayer for her second husband. The name of this bricklayer is not known. Mistrese Jonson probably married him to better her condition, and to support her boy. He appears to have been poor, and to have put Ben to his own trade. Aubrey says that Ben worked with his step-father upon the garden wall of Lincoln's Inn, on the side next Chancery Lane; and Fuller says that he helped in the structure of Lincoln's Inn, when, having a trowel in his hand, he had a book in his pocket. Jonson's mother must have been a woman of great spirit. She lived to see him acknowledged as a famous poet, and was determined that no harm should befall him, in her lifetime at least. He was in danger of of disgrace at one time, and through his own nobility of character. He wrote, in conjunction with Chapman and Marston, the comedy of Eastward Ho-an unlucky passage in which was construed into a reflection upon the Scotch. His pedantic Majesty, King James, took offense, and Chapman and Marston were arrested. Jonson was not included in the process, but he accompanied his fellew dramatists to prison, as he considered himself equally responsible with them. It was reported that their ears and noses were to be slit. But this punishment, if ever seriously meditated, was not inflicted. Interest was made in their favor the biographers say; a second edition of the comedy was issued with the offensive passage omitt ed, and they were released, wiser if not sadder men. Jonson celebrated his liberation with a banquet. Selden was there, and Camden, his old master at Westminster,-"Camden! most reverend head, to whom I owe

All that I am in arts, all that I know,"and among others one whom he must have honored,-his aged mother. She drank to him, and showed him a paper of strong and lusty poison, which she designed to have mixed with his drink, if the sentence had been carried into effect; and, to show him that she was no churl, she designed to have first drauk of it herself. - Scribner for July.
